DRIFT IN CANADA

Analysis of Sentiment Shows That Dominion Has Lost Hope of Securing Reciprocity.

PRINCIPAL CAUSES OF ANGER.

Friendship for Boers and the Alaskan Boundary Dispute Lead to Estrangement Across the Border.

BY JOHN H. RAFTERY.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL. Sunnyside, Prince Edward Island, Aug. 24.—In order to arrive at an adequate and symmetrical appreciation of public opinion in the maritime Provinces of Canada with regard to reciprocity or free trade with the United States, it is necessary to classify the wishes and beliefs which all orts of people here express.

First, there are those who, for reason of mmerce and public economy, favor a re iprocal treaty and openly assert both the desire and the hope of its fulfillment. Second, those who believe in the wisdom of a trade interchange with America, but who contend that it is past praying for and not so essential to the prosperity of the Dominton as it once seemed.

Third, those who scout the idea either of reciprocity or free trade with the States who say that it is a Utopian idea which is neither agreeable nor permissible to the loyal and sensible subjects of Great Britain and Canada.

HOW SENTIMENT IS DIVIDED.

The business men, who make up the first group, are but little influenced by sentiment, either of ultra-loyality to the mother country or of anti-American prejudice. They look at the subject from a purely commercial point of view and say that it is good, and that, therefore, it should come to pass. The second, and by far the most numerous, class shares in the judgment of the first, but is influenced by the sentimental prejudices of the third group, and the latter, whether Liberal or Conservative in Canadian politics, is deliberately and often openly hostile to the United States, both politically and commercially.

I have said that the middle and most cially.

I have said that the middle and most

cially.

I have said that the middle and most numerous group shares the commercial policy of reciprocity as expressed by the advocates of that theory, and also participates in those imperial or patriotic predilections which gain considerable policitary and strength from a positive antipathy for the United States, its policies and its people.

No study of Canadian public sentiment with regard to commerce with the United States would be complete at this time without a consideration of the anti-American feeling that exists here. There are many advocates of reciprocity who would be willing to subordinate their dislike for the United States to what seems a wise and progressive national step, but the radical imperialist here would rather endure commercial losses and hindered progress than declare for any kind of intimate dealings with the republic to the south of him.

Unfortunately for the cause of Canadian-American reciprocity, that propaganta has remained quiescent during a period in which Canada has experienced a wave of British patriotism that was little short of ecstasy and that survives in a widespread and unaccustomed tenderness for the Empire as a unit in peace and in wer.

BOER WAR WAKENS LOYALTY.

BOER WAR WAKENS LOYALTY. The Boer War did more to reawaken the passive loyalty of Canada to the Empire than anything that has happened in the than anything that has happened in the memory of this Dominien. Canada sent $5.000 of her best young soldiers to fight for the flag of St. George on the desert veidts of South Africa.

Meanwhile the people of the United States gave their preponder and sympathies to the Boers. The press of america teemed with words of praise and approval of the rebellious burghers, while Canada gave of her men and money to help destroy with words of praise and approval of the rebellious burghers, while Canada gave of her men and money to help destroy what it believed a common enemy of the whole Empire.

The opponents of American reciprocity are still thundering about the attitude of the States during the South African war, and the friends of commercial oneness of continental reciprocity, a cause which had been made inert largely by the unpropitious posture of the Congress, have been grieved if not stienced by the renewal of American bigotries, and the waxing popularity of an all British trade compact against the world.

The Alaskan boundary dispute, in which, perhaps, Canada was outmaneuvered; the fallure of Dominion Commissioners to win headway at Washington for reciprocity; the unbuilding of the American tariff wall; the fisheries contentions; the Venezuela enjsoic; a few isolated incidents in which the British flag was dishonored by American Anglo-phobes; the Boer war display of anti-English sympathy in the States—I have heard all of these real or fancied grievances recited a dozen times within two weeks, so that in honesty they cannot be overlooked. A few radical tories, as one may call them, point to the presence of whole families and even settlements here that were founded by royalists driven from America during the revolution; others recall the Fenian raid and the bitterness against Envisand rife in the union during the Civil War.

BEILIEF IN RECIPROCITY.

BELIEF IN RECIPROCITY. Nothing could better demonstrate the depth and insistency of the belief in American reciprocity which prevails in these Provinces of Canada than the fact that it has survived and even gained strength Provinces of Canada than the fact that it has survived and even gained strength under so many discouraging circumstances. If it were not for the obstacles, actual and sentimental, which I have mentioned unlimited reciprocity might have been consummated long ago.

Even now it seems that the weight and trend of popular opinion is towards reciprocity, but it is an undercurrent that for the time seems to be overron and dominated by other and perhaps more superficial considerations. Sentiment usually gives way at last to interest, with nations as with individuals, but here and now in Canada there are influences which tend to keep them apart.

A man who has sat in the House of Commons at Ottawa for twenty years, and who with voice and pen has waged during that period an incessant campaign for unlimited reciprocity between Canada and the United States, told me yesterday that, in his opinion, the battle was forever lost.

"Your country has done more to make Canada British than all the other influences in our history. You have rebuffed our advances and chiesed us in convention. You have taken sides with the enemies of the Empire and sneered at our growth and resources.

"There are men in your Senate who do not know that Canada, with its 6,000,000 people, has more miles of railroad, more tons of shipping, more commerce per capita than the States have per capita with their 80,000,000 people, has more miles of railroad, more tons of shipping, more commerce per capita than the States have per capita with their 80,000,000 people, has more miles of railroad, more tons of shipping, more commerce per capita than the States have per capita with their 80,000,000 people, has more miles of railroad, more tons of shipping, more commerce per capita than the States have per capita with their 80,000,000 people, has more miles of railroad, more tons of shipping, more commerce per capita than the States have per capita with their 80,000,000 people, has more miles of railroad, more tons of shipping, more commerce per capita than the State hetter come in where there's contains doing." I tried to convince him that we are doing somewhat. We built our railroad across the continent to the Pacific when we had less than 200,000 people on that coast. You had a million there before your Pacific railroad was completed. We are your fourth best customer among the nations. We might be first if you would let us."

DRIFT IS TOWARD ENGLAND. This veteran champion of continental trade unity yet believes in the mutual adrantages contained in that international policy, but he has been silenced, at least for the present, by the conditions which have overwhelmed his theory. He sees the drift of England toward trade coalition with the colonies and of the colonies toward closer community of interests with the rest of the Empire, and he repeats: "The United States has done more to make us British than any other influence in our history." Every advocate of reciprocity in these maritime Provinces will agree with this opinion, but they will not admit that the cause is lost.

The Impression must not be taken from this measurement of public opinion here that there is anything vindictive or virulent in the attitude of even the most radpolicy, but he has been silenced, at least ical opponent of reciprocity with the United States. The worst of these would ignore without antagonizing the markets and people of the United States if that were possible. But the majority, even while looking away from America and across the ocean to the markets of England and her colonies, remain convinced of their long-cherished belief in continental reciprocity and alert for the first evidence of that American initiative which they, too, believe to be essential to the tangible development of their faith and doctrine in this matter.
